scial Correspondence of the Cleveland Luapun MEADVILLE, September 28, 1865. The two o'clock express from Cleveland on Wednesday afterneon brought a large part of the party of foreign tourists who have just made the circuit of the United States and cities, and have, in a business way, been explorers of no common stamp Mr. McHenry and Sir Morton Peto spent the day in examining the coal fields in the vicinity of Hubbard's Mills and Youngsown, and arrived at Meadville about 11 r. u. Great preparations had been made by Mr. Taylor for an illumination of the extensive grounds of the House. Arranged around the central mound of the gardens vas a circle of locomotive head lights throwing their brilliant flood of light in every direction. Extending in a orden around the grounds and arranged in pyramids, circles, and other forms, throughout the park, were more than twelve hundred colored lanterns and Chiiese lamps, which, when lighted up, gave ance. Upon the music stand in front of the hotel Leland's Band played a choice selection of its eloquent music, giving continual pleasure to the guests, who promensded the balconies of the hotel, or the graveled walks of the gardens. The night was delightfully cool and clear, and the occasion was heartily enjoyed by all. To day the party is spending as seems to each one best. It is needless to say that the most of them are gaining some of the much needed rest of which they have been o greatly deprived while upon their tour. Some of the correspondents have taken advantage of the time to make a flying trip to Franklin, Reno, and Oil City, while all of the party, and I dare not say how many invited outsiders, are thinking of the party which is to be given here this evening, in honor of the distinguished guests. The great dining hall of McHenry House has been draped with flags and evergreens, the colors of England, Spain, and the United States being fraternally twined together. A portion of the room is set off by s drapery of flags, for the supper room, where refreshments will be furnished from eleven o'clock till three, this plan having many one of a fixed time for all to sit down to gether. In addition to the party there will be abundant entertainment for those who do not attend the ball. The grounds will be again illuminated and there will be a fine display of fireworks on the Hotel park. Mr. Taylor has displayed his usual taste and energy in arranging these entertainments. and his efforts appear to be appreciated.

Of the further proceedings of the day and of the party itself, I will duly inform you.

MEABVILLE, September 29, 1865. The gray dawn is spreading in the cast; the "early to bed and early to rise" roosters of the Meadville barnyards have repeatedly declared that it was time to rise and go forth to seek for the untimely worm who train for the West will soon bear away its proportion of the representatives of the city upon the Lake; and with the dreamy waltzes of Leland and Olker even now quivering in the morning air, and while thestill small voice of Ballov, the impressario of the ball rooms, hovers around the ceiling of the saloon, I stick a pin through my eyelids and proceed to tell you of the final reception of the railway princes, who, after a prosperous trip over the expanse of the Great West, have now furled their sails as they reach the harbor of repose and taken off the harness as they finish the last stage. (That percention may seem to you slightly mixed as to the similes, but I can't rewrite it short of twenty-five cents per line in advance.)

You have been told of so many dinners given to this illustrious party, have recorded so many speeches to and from them, have typographically "received" them so many times, that it may purrle me to find new adjectives with which to describe the warmth and success of this reception, that have not been already worn threadbare in your columns, But this I can boldly affirm, that in no one of the cities our distinguished guests have visited have they been more heartily welcomed than here, and nowhere have they passed an evening in the presence of a more refined and elegant an assembly than they have done in this "provincial town," which three years ago could only be reached by a long course of staging or canaling. Meadville has long had a reputation, I am informed, of having more than a proportionate quota of feminine beauty. This last assembly has given me more proof of the justice of that verdict. And when to the attractions which Meadville society furnished, you add that of Cleveland, Jamestown, Cincinnati, Kent, Akron, Warran and a score of other cities you may form a dim idea of the attendance upon the party which is now drawing to a

The noon train of yesterday brought M. Kent, President of the Ohio Division of the Atlantic & Great Western Railway, and his lady, Secretary Tyler, of the same, and lady, Directors Crall, Riblet and others. The Cleveland trains brought a goodly representation, among whom I noticed ex-Governor Tod, ex-Mayor Senter, Collector Grannis, Major-General Burnside, General Hazen, and many others, most of whom were considerate enough to bring with them their good wives. The guests from abroad were assigned to hospitable quarters in the village, at the Hotels or with the good citizens who threw their doors open for the purpose. In this work Messrs, McParland, Cullum, Shippen and Shryock were active and efficient.

During the afternoon, while the guests were amusing themselves as they saw fit, very many of them taking the occasion to stroll about the town and see the evidences of thrift and energy that are visible on every hand, workmen were busy in preparing the extensive grounds about the McHenry House for the out-door illumination of the evening. Upon posts, wires and frame works, as well as upon the hundreds of trees and shrubs with which the grounds are plentifully supplied, were hung colored lamps and lanterns almost nnumerable, many of them of fanciful design and all of brilliantly variegated colors. The effect of this multitude of lights scattered through the grounds, to which was added a circle of locomotive head lights as a central pyramid, was bewilderingly beauful, seeming more like tales out of tairy land than a prosale matter of fact garden of Pennsylvania. A great number of the people of the place filled the walks and lawns. enjoying the spectacle and listening to the magic notes of Jack Leland's bugle from the music stand in front of the Hotel. The loonies of the McHenry House were filled with the guests of the day, or rather of the night, and apparently all highly enjoyed with which Jeakins commonly penetrates each secret of each lady's wardrobe, knows to a fraction how much her diamonds and swalry cost, and narrated to his gaping readers how the majestic Miss A, the fasci nating Mrs. B, and the petite Miss C were dorned, and how many conquests they made by virtue of their apparel. I know that in point of numbers in attendance, or the elegance of many of the toilets, and of the charming attractions of the wearers of the same, this ball would be hard, exceed ingly hard, to excel. The Hall was com fortably filled, but not crowded. The music was perfect in selection and style of execution, and the dancers were apparently thoroughly enjoying themselves from first to last. What more could you ask, and cannot you fill the deficiencies of th description yourselves? As for me my retrospective vision, as I look back on the evening, is a pleasingly confused mass of white, black, brown, blue, green and lemon silks; of lace shawls capes, collars, handkerchiefs and head dreses, of wondrous patterns but marvel lously pretty; of glittering dismonds dashing rubies, liquid spar, pellucid crystal and substantial gold, wrought into cun ningly beautiful shapes; of all the wondrous variety with which beauty can so skillfully array itself upon occasion. The universal testimony was that no happier or more perfectly enjoyable party had ever been devised, while in point of elegance of oilet displayed the assembly could compare favorably with the hops of the water ing places or of the great cities.

Of the supper tables-which were oper for the reception of any who chose to call upon them at any and all times from 11 to 3 o'clock—it is absolutely impossible to say too much in the way of praise. Host Tayfor fairly out did himself, famed as he ba been for his pravious triumphs in the call nary art. Rich viands and choice wines were set forth in most bountiful profusion and none could come away dissatisfied.

It is too late to go further into detail The reception and the ball have been perfect and unqualified success, and, as such, deserve to 'be remembered as one of the good times of the past. In all its preparation, in all its committee work (ne light matter when the affair is upon such a scale as this,) and in every part of its excution, it was well done.

To-morrow-po, to-day,-at 90'clock, the principal part of the party will take final save and proceed toward New York. A few will visit the oil country, and join the others in New York, Thence they proceed to Canada, and afterwards as far as Richmond, sailing fer home in Novem-

The party is breaking up; the merry lancers are retiring to their dressing rooms, and soon empty walls, dismantled platform and a heat of pleasant memories will be al that is left of the grand ball at Meadville.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC .- There was a large and, in many respects, brilliant audience a the Academy of Music, last evening, flattering alike to the beneficiary and the admirable bill which was presented-embracing, "Old Phil's Birthday "and "Mills White," both dramas of a very acceptable character, and in which Mr. Couldock's greatest power and peculiarities as an actor are brought fully into requisition. A more creditable and satisfactory performance an that of last evening, in all its details, we have never witnessed in the Academy, and where all were so uniformly correct we need go no further than this general state-

To-night our citizens are promised a sterling entertainment in the presentation of Shakspeare's grand tragedy of "Othello," in which Mr. Couldock will personate the wily, subtle and treacherous Isgo. We are informed by the bills that this is the first casion of Mr. C.'s appearance in this character for nine years; but all who are amiliar with the records of the stage will remember his great reputation as the delineator of this great creation of Shaks-peare, in which all the depths of cunning villainy are so artfully mingled with the soft and honest exterior. We believe in his earlier days Mr. Couldock was the sucsenaful rival of the great Junius Brutus Booth in this difficult part, and except Booth, was accredited the first place on the American stage as Iago. We think he Las lost little of the fire, and certainly none of the talent, which made hom celebrated in the character years ago a. Mr. Joseph E. Naglo will play the Moor, and we have it from good judges that his rendition of the character is un: zceptionable, and in some respects, una rsed. Miss Couldock will appear as Emilia, a character in which she will he re a favorable opportunity to exhibit an order of acting entirely different from any in which Cleveland audiences have yet some her. Mrs. Ellsler sustains the charac er of Desdemona, Mr. Elisler as Brabantio, which on a former occasion he rendered most ably. The other characters are cust to the best possible advantage. The entertainment will conclude with the farce of "My Neighbor's Wife," making altogether a bill that will not be surpassed this season.

"HEFT" DEMOCRATIC MESTING IN THE FIFTH WARD .- A tremendous meeting was held by the unwashed Democracy of the Fifth Ward last night. Joseph Sturges, Esq., was chairman. The groves were God's first temples, and probably a cart was the original platform. At any rate the Fifth Warders were primitive, and the President of the meeting took his seat in a cart on the sidewalk, and the speakers also held forth in the same vehicle. Father sturges (for he is one of the City Fathers) ooked as dignified in a cart as on a Brusels-carpeted rostrum. He losmed up over the crowd of two dozen men, grand as Little Mountain" over a potato patch. Frank Kelly was the first speaker. He nade out, in his violent gesticulation, to sep aboard the cart. Then came George F. Marshall, and he was followed by Dr. Inglehart, the Demoeratic candidate for Representative, who was in a very happy condition. He could hardly contain himself, and Father Sturges had all he could do, in the way of ballasting, to keep the craft from upsetting. The Doctor reeled, and the President was constantly menaced by this "leaning tower of Pisa.". He forgot himself. "Well, Mis'er Chairmun, what's I sayin'? (Hic.) O. I was sayin' that (hic) this damn'd Repubelican party are set of damn'd thieves. They'll steal (hic) from Maine to Cal'forny.

He continued in this style for some time, hat was at length supersoded by Billiam Heisley, Esq., who, although perfectly sober, made a speech no less temperate than that of his predecessor.

Poor health led Mr. Carleton to spend the winter of 1864-5 in Cuba, where he relieved the monotony of invalid existence as well as gave form to his impressions, by akotching representative characters, salient features of Cubau life, &c., &c. On his return he was importuned to give the results of his travel to the public, and this series of fifty drawings on wood, printed on tinted paper, has thus come to the light of common day. It were well for the public if ninetenths of all the spawn of travel were

We have received this second book of Artemus. Considering how dearly the trade is falt, and prices are firm. American heart loves extravagance and carricature, and a wild, uncouth and Richter-like humor, A. Ward must be counted a fixed fact with us. America reckons him immense, and he certainly might be called the prince of American humorists, if it were proper to dub with a dignified title "the sugged in filling contracts made in July and angulows," who, from the nature of his office, "knows that he is the tail of the procession."

Other articles in our quoted that are unchanged.

We are glad to see that Artemus, in the Mormon part of his book, lays saide the "peculiar bad spelling," a system of mschinery on which his humor had no need ever to rely. The essence of that style or form of art, had been exhausted long ago by the English humorists.

These letters and papers, in this collected form, do not strike us with half the force with which they struck us as stray and occasional missives. Perhaps one in reading it is invariably tempted, like Eve, though with slightly different aim, and over-indulges, gets an over-dose, and so tires of surfeit. But we fancy that pure, unmixed humor of this sort is hardly a legitimate branch of literature. A man seems to come to a poor pass when he writes with no higher aim than to touch the risibles. Our greatest and best essayist says that it is not the office of the best wit to make us laugh.

It falls in the edition of "Companion Poets for the People," being the fourth of the series, which will soon ren in corresponding volumes by Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mrs. Browning's rich and powerful genius is strangely undervalued in England. He is even unknown by prominent journalists. This sur-prising confession almost equals that Walter Savage Landor, made to Emerson several years since, that he had never heard of Herschel, not even by name It is quite a compliment to the American intellect, the fact that the Old World's fine geniuses and subtile wits must come to America for recognition and warm appre
